Opening: 1st October 1998

Managing Director: Paul van Frank

History: The first visitors to Frégate Island were probably pirates who sought temporary refuge on the island following their raids. The island provided them with everything they needed: secret hideaways, fresh water and an abundant supply of food.

In 1744, the French seafarer Lazare Picault explored the granitic islands of the Seychelles, and named our island Frégate after the elegant Frigate birds he found nesting on the rocks. In 1770, the Seychelles Islands became a French colony, which was annexed by the British in 1811, who abolished slavery under their rule.

The first political parties in Seychelles were founded in 1964, and in 1975 the island group was recognized as an autonomous colony with the right to independent decisions on internal affairs. In 1976, the island group was finally granted independence. Today, the Republic of Seychelles is a peaceful democracy.

Seasons:

The climate is tropical and year-long warm between 26°C/79°F and 30°C/86°F.

The period between October and May is called the Northwest Monsoon in the Seychelles.

This season is characterized by the lack of strong winds. Ideal, calm sea conditions normally prevail, and this favours big game fishing, snorkelling and diving. Underwater visibility is at its best.

The Northwest Monsoon is the period of highest humidity, and is also the rainy season for this region of the western Indian Ocean. Tropical Monsoon rain usually falls in heavy, short, sharp showers... after which the sun reappears and the vacation continues. Rains lasting for longer periods are not usually encountered more than a couple of times during the rainy period of the year. Rain can fall in any month of the year.

The period between May and October is called the South East Monsoon in the Seychelles.

This season is characterized by the daily, steady South East Trade Winds which tend to make for rough sea conditions. Water sports like sailing and windsurfing are popular activities at this time, but snorkelling, diving and fishing are less successful due to the rough sea conditions and impaired visibility. Rain is less likely during this season, whilst humidity is at its lowest level during the South East
